PROGRAM DESCRIPTION AND ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Design Awards 2007 Program

DesignShare proudly announces the 8th Annual International Awards Program for Innovative Learning Environments. The Design Awards program is the most in-depth, researched body of case studies of innovative learning environments in the world.

Project submittals include educator narrative, architect’s narrative, site plan, floor plans, construction data, images, and the option of design patterns and color-coded diagrams.

Focus on Learning

The DesignShare Awards program is unique in many ways because it extends well beyond the architecture itself by focusing first on learning, second on the learners, and third on how the built or natural environment provides rich learning opportunities for the 21st century. Since 2000, the program has committed to challenging traditional standards and by focusing on learner-centered, cost-efficient and sustainable learning environments. No other awards program comes close to supporting learning at the heart of the design process.

The evolving nature of education is challenging school design teams to understand the very nature of learning—how, when, where, what, and who we learn with tomorrow and beyond. An awards program for school and university design with a rigorous evaluation process focused on learning sends a message: “Here are learning environment models that work for the 21st century!” The good news is that the 150,000 visitors to DesignShare each month represent an emerging consensus: we all learn differently, yet we learn in community, we learn everywhere, all the time; our learning is integrated with work, with families, with people of all age groups, and with the natural and built environment

Best Practices Library

Each winning project will join over 400 documented case studies published at DesignShare.com from over 20 countries around the world. This library, used by design professionals and educators alike, continues to be the largest collection of innovative school design projects available for free on the Web.

Benefits

Projects with strongest concepts and execution will receive awards and be featured by our our media partners in fall publications. In 2006, DesignShare was proud to work with the following publications: School Construction News, Edutopia (George Lucas Educational Foundation), and UK-based SchoolsforLife.

All winning projects will appear in DesignShare’s online Project Library, as well as receive special feature treatment. Additionally, all submitting firms receive a one-year subscription to DesignShare’s online firm directory.

Selected projects may also be included in events such as forums and conferences.

Eligibility

We invite anyone involved in the creation of outstanding learning environments to register for the Design Awards program. The Awards program seeks submittals from all over the world. Our special inclusion policy and eligibility policy modifies or waives registration fees to deserving applicants, making the program accessible to all applicants, including those from developing nations, foundations, and very small organizations.

Eligible for consideration: Any project completed within the last 3 years.

Projects scheduled for design, renovation, or construction planning during 2006, and fitting into one of the following categories are welcome:

- Early childhood and preschool
- Elementary, middle, and high schools
- Schools serving special grade ranges
- Higher education facilities and campuses
- Alternative learning environments—includes educational settings within the context of a facility that focuses on another mission. Examples include environmental and technology centers, children's and science museums, libraries, work spaces, and other learning environments.

Review Team

Our twelve distinguished international review team members—each a recognized leader in their specialty—combine a wealth of experience in educational facility planning, architecture, and research. Using advanced Web tools to analyze project data and conduct online discussions, the team generates remarkable collective insights.

Mission

DesignShare is the world's premier database of ideas, research, and projects focused on positively influencing and enhancing the future of the learning environment. Our review team recognizes and rewards projects on the strength of their ideas, quality of implementation, and impact on future school design and construction, as well as aesthetics.
